Israeli military withdraws its 98th division from Khan Younis in Gaza after months of intense confrontations

The Israeli army has withdrawn its ground forces from Khan Younis in the south of Gaza after months of intense confrontations.

The Israel Defense Forces (IDF) announced on Sunday that its 98th division had "completed its mission" in Khan Younis. The division is abandoning the Gaza Strip to "recover and prepare for future operations".

The IDF added that "a significant force led by the 162nd division and the Nahal battalion continues to operate in the Gaza Strip and will preserve the freedom of movement of the IDF and its capacity to carry out precise operations based on intelligence."

An Israeli unit along the border where troops enter and leave Gaza has not yet seen large numbers of troops withdrawing, but has seen a large number of tanks withdrawing from Khan Younis during the night. They are now stationed at the Gaza-Israel border.

A typical Israeli brigade has about 5,000 troops, but it is not yet clear exactly how many Israeli soldiers have withdrawn from Gaza.

Until January, the 98th division was the largest in the history of the IDF, as it had been reinforced specifically to fight against Hamas in Khan Younis.

When asked about the reasons for the withdrawal, the IDF refused to comment. The IDF also did not say whether this means there are no more forces on the ground in the south of Gaza.

It is also unclear what the withdrawal means for Israel's plans to invade Rafah, the southern part of Gaza that has become a refuge for hundreds of thousands of Palestinians. Israel has said that an incursion into Rafah is essential to achieve its goal of eliminating Hamas from Gaza.

The Israeli public broadcaster and the affiliated Channel 11 reported on Sunday that the remaining forces would be located along the so-called Netzarim Bypass, a route that divides the Gaza Strip into two. Named after the Israeli settlement of Netzarim in Gaza, the bypass crosses one of the two main roads north-south in Gaza, Salaheddin Street, to create an important strategic intersection.

Before withdrawing, the IDF said on Sunday that its units had searched and found more than 100 locations in the Al-Amal neighborhood of Khan Younis, where they found a long tunnel and "eliminated terrorists". We cannot verify these claims independently.

This is a developing story and will be updated.
